Summary: What if Ren called out Kyoko's name while Setsu was kissing Cain? A slip up and its consequences. Not a lemon.

Oops

Kyoko knew Setsu knew Tsuruga-san who as trying to be her Nii-san was struggling with some inner darkness. He'd been really losing control lately, smiling while fighting on set, and just minutes ago losing his temper with her! She had been really frightened but she remembered her discussion with the president. She needed to support her sempai because, as inappropriate as it may be given their age and career gaps, she loved him.

Which is why marking him was so difficult. Not only did she have no clue what she was doing, but her long-suppressed feelings were making it difficult to remain professional. She wanted to help her beloved sempai, not violate him. Was this even going to work? He himself had given her the directions. Oh well, she would just go along with it for now and pray for the best. It was hard to make rational decisions when her fears and something else were making her mind and heart raceâ€!

Ren was trying to catch up with the situation. He had gotten violent with his precious Kyoko, who he had decided to protect since they first met when they were children. He felt terrible about his earlier actions but to be perfectly honest, he was forgetting about the incident every secondâ€! Kyoko was kissing him. She was so close he could feel her pounding heart, matching his. He wrapped his arms around her pulling her closer. Would she be doing this if she didn't return his feelings? Ah. Forget it. He would think after this was over, for now he'd just enjoy being close to the one he loved.

Kyoko felt his arms tighten around her. Unsure what to do she brought her hands up to his neck and increased the pressure of her kiss. She felt his chest heaving under her. Her lips slipped off when he tilted his head and croaked, "Kyoko!"

Suddenly, Ren felt Kyoko push away. He lay panting looking up at her with hurt and confusion. Her eyes were filled with fear. His slip-up dawned on him and his eyes widened. He swallowed.

"We should probably get to bed."

She tensed at that but relaxed when he unwound himself from her and made his way to his own bed.

"Good night Setsu."

"Good night Nii-san," she croaked too.

It took Kyoko at least three hours to fall asleep after the incident. She understood now. Her actions had been completely inappropriate and Tsuruga-san was so uncomfortable he could no longer stay in character. She broke the best actor in the world with herâ€¢ stupidity? Selfishness? Total inadequacy. She was so angry with herself. She probably ruined their relationship. Kyoko had thought if they stayed in character than anything that happened between them as the Heel siblings would remain separate from their normal routine. She was devastated to lose the closeness she had with the one she loved and so scared of what the consequences of her actions would be. It was with a heavy heart that she finally worried herself to sleep.

When Kyoko awoke, she was alone. She checked the hotel's digital clock. It was nearly lunch time! No doubt Tsuruga-san was on set. It was just as well, she hadn't really been ready to face him. She decided to tidy up the hotel room to keep herself busy. That was when she noticed a note on the night stand:

Setsu,

I'm sorry for getting angry last night.

Thank you for your understanding.

Let's talk about it after work.

Love,

Nii-san

She understood the part about being angry. That obviously referred to when he had to break character to stop her from violating him. She spat at herself in her head. As for the understanding bit, she supposed he was thanking her in advance for being strong through the lecture she knew was coming her way. After work? She wasn't sure if that meant when he got back from filming or when they left the roles of the Heel siblings. The last part had confused her for the longest. In the end she decided that it would make the note more convincing if it fell into the wrong hands. Satisfied with her deductions, she continued her task of cleaning their room.

Ren was anxious all day. He basically ignored everyone else around him, maintaining an iron mask as he worked out his thoughts.

He had to confess to her. And then he had to apologize. She would probably leave him, and he couldn't blame her. Showing aggression towards her and then taking advantage? It was one of the lowest things he had ever done, and, he noted, that list was extensive.

When he finally returned to the hotel room, Kyoko was folding clothes. She froze when he came through the door, but after he silently went about locking up and putting his outdoor things away, she resumed.

I suppose this means he won't lecture me until after our role is over. She kept looking down at her clothes. Embarrassment invaded her thoughts due to their scantily nature and she realized she wasn't in character. Oh well she thought. It's just as well, he already knows I've failed as an actress.

"Mogami-san?"

Oh shit. After work did mean now. Kyoko braced herself.

"Yes sempai?"

She swallowed, but still didn't look up. She heard him cross the room and he crouched down before her.

He said very softly, as if afraid of scaring her, "I would like to apologise again for my behaviour last night."

This took her by surprise, but after a beat she started spluttering an apology of her own, dismissing his, taking all the blame onto herself, suggesting the possibility of her being thrown out of the agency, after all she was no longer eligible for LoveMe-

Wait, Ren wondered, what was that last part about? No, it didn't matter. He needed to halt her verbal self-abuse.

"Mogami-san, calm down. I am in no way mad at you nor do I find you at fault. Please listen to what I have to say now, and please try not to interrupt until I'm done."

Oh no, now she interrupted him! She really couldn't do anything right. Listen! She scolded herself.

"â€œ| because of my feelings for you. I understand that is no excuse my actions were entirely-"

"Wait, pardon?" Kyoko interrupted.

Ren sighed. She was not making this easy for himâ€œ|

"Last night I became worried and jealous because you seemed to be in such close contact with Shotaro. When I lashed out at you, you showed me nothing but kindness and professionalism. I took advantage of this kindness. The reason I called your name and not Setsu was because I love you."

Kyoko could hear the blood rushing in her ears. She was so confused! This wasn't like her sempai, but nothing lately was.

"I understand that this is inappropriate and do not wish to make you upset so therefore I will behave from now on in a way that better shows respect for professionalism-"

His rant was stopped by Kyoko cupping his face with her hand.

"Do you really love me?" she inquired of him, eyes searching his face for honesty.

Ren swallowed and nodded.

"Yes," he said.

She gave him a small, slow smile. Her face was peaceful.

"I love you too."

"Oh," he said. He was processing this slowly. Hesitantly, he raised himself up to brush his lips against hers. She inhaled in surprise but then kissed him back.

"Okay," he said when they broke apart. He grinned at her and they kissed again.

Hi friends! I just went through and made some grammatical edits. Thank you for reading, I really appreciate your support!
